

OLD SAYING WAS RECALLED BY CINCINNATI GROUP AS THEY READ OF KING'S DEATH

Ancient Prediction of Restoration of Constantinople in Reign of Ruler of That Name—Country Tired of Monarchy, It Is Said.

An ancient saying was in the minds of Cincinnati Greeks when they read of the death of King Alexander and the possibility that his father, the deposed King Constantine, might attempt to regain the throne from which he was expelled in the war period. The saying is that in the reign of a king, Constantine by name, Constantinople will be restored to the Greeks. Mrs. Marie Economidy, director of the Greek government's exhibit at the Cincinnati Art museum, commented upon the saying in discussing probable successors to the dead king. Many Greeks believe the saying, she says. "The king's death occurred at a most unfortunate time for Greece," said Mrs. Economidy. "If Venizelos is retained as premier, confidence will be restored, I believe; and soon Greece will become a republic. If a king rules in Greece I can not believe it will be for long. The new reconstruction plans of the country can best be carried out by a republican government, many think; now that King Alexander is dead there seems little doubt that the republic will soon be a fact."

Mrs. Economidy said the young king was very popular. "Many people approved his marriage with a woman of Greek blood," she said. "They were tired of the royal blood of other countries, and were glad to accept his wife, even though the marriage was a morganatic one."
