OBJECT DESCRIPTION

ORIGIN

This photograph is of Peter Clironomos, a private of the U.S. Army during World War I. He retired in Lyrkeia, Argos, Greece around 1956. The photograph was donated by Dena Colovos in 2012 to the National Hellenic Museum. The photograph is from Peter Colovos's village of Belesi, now Lypkeia, Argos.
