OBJECT DESCRIPTION

US Army camouflage fatigue uniform jacket.

This is a long-sleeved jacket with a khaki-green and medium-brown camouflage design. Both colors run into each other in an irregular splattered-paint pattern. There are small black and white splotches scattered all over the entire jacket.

The neck-collar leaves are pointed with a rectangular patch on each leaf displaying three embroidered stars. The jacket is single-breasted with hidden button front closure.

On the front near the bottom hem of the jacket, there are two gusseted pockets with flaps: one on the left, the other on the right.

The right sleeve has two patches sewn on. The American flag is on the bottom, and a dark shield-shaped patch with an army symbol is on the top. The left sleeve is plain, save for the two khaki-beige buttons sewn on near the wrist.
