OBJECT DESCRIPTION

Four-sided, footed tin lantern. Each side consists of a glass panel framed in tin. The lantern is topped with a four-sided tin dome that has a large tin ring attached to the top of it. One of the glass panels is hinged and has a hook so you can open it like a door. Inside the lantern, there is a round container made to hold the oil and wick. The lantern sits on four tin legs; one in each corner.

ORIGIN

Donated by Helen Frangos.

Most likely used for everyday use in a home. The lantern burned either oil or kerosene which means it is circa mid 19th century to early 20th century when electric lighting became more accessible and affordable.
